in situations of relative values, one is often forced to choose between goods, to emphasize that which he feels to be most important at the expense of another good. in a school such as calvin where the total is somehow greater than the mere sum of its parts, individuals and organizations assume their greatest importance when viewed as an aspect of that totality. the 1961 prism is an attempt to express this relation between the part and the whole, an attempt to view the part in the light of the whole. unable to do more, and hoping at least to do this, the importance of the part as such has been largely overlooked in deference to the importance of the whole.

in a time nearly bereft of symbols, we have chosen to sustain some which are clearly universal, some which are unalterably private. others have been pressed upon us by the peculiar weight of tradition to become curiously meaningful. the calvin ring is such a symbol, one which has become important, not for its intrinsic beauty or its general significance, but because we have impressed it with the meaning of calvin college.

grand rapids, an unpretentious skyline, and a shallow river. occasionally the blaze of business punctuates the static streets. for those who keep it, a clean city; for those who challenge its facade, an unalarming town, somnolent, unperturbed. for those who come to chase an academic whim, it is primarily a school, incidentally a metropolis.

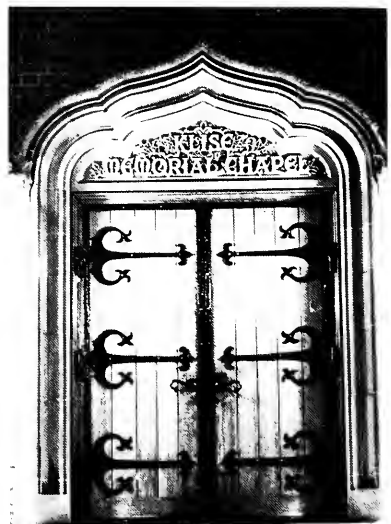

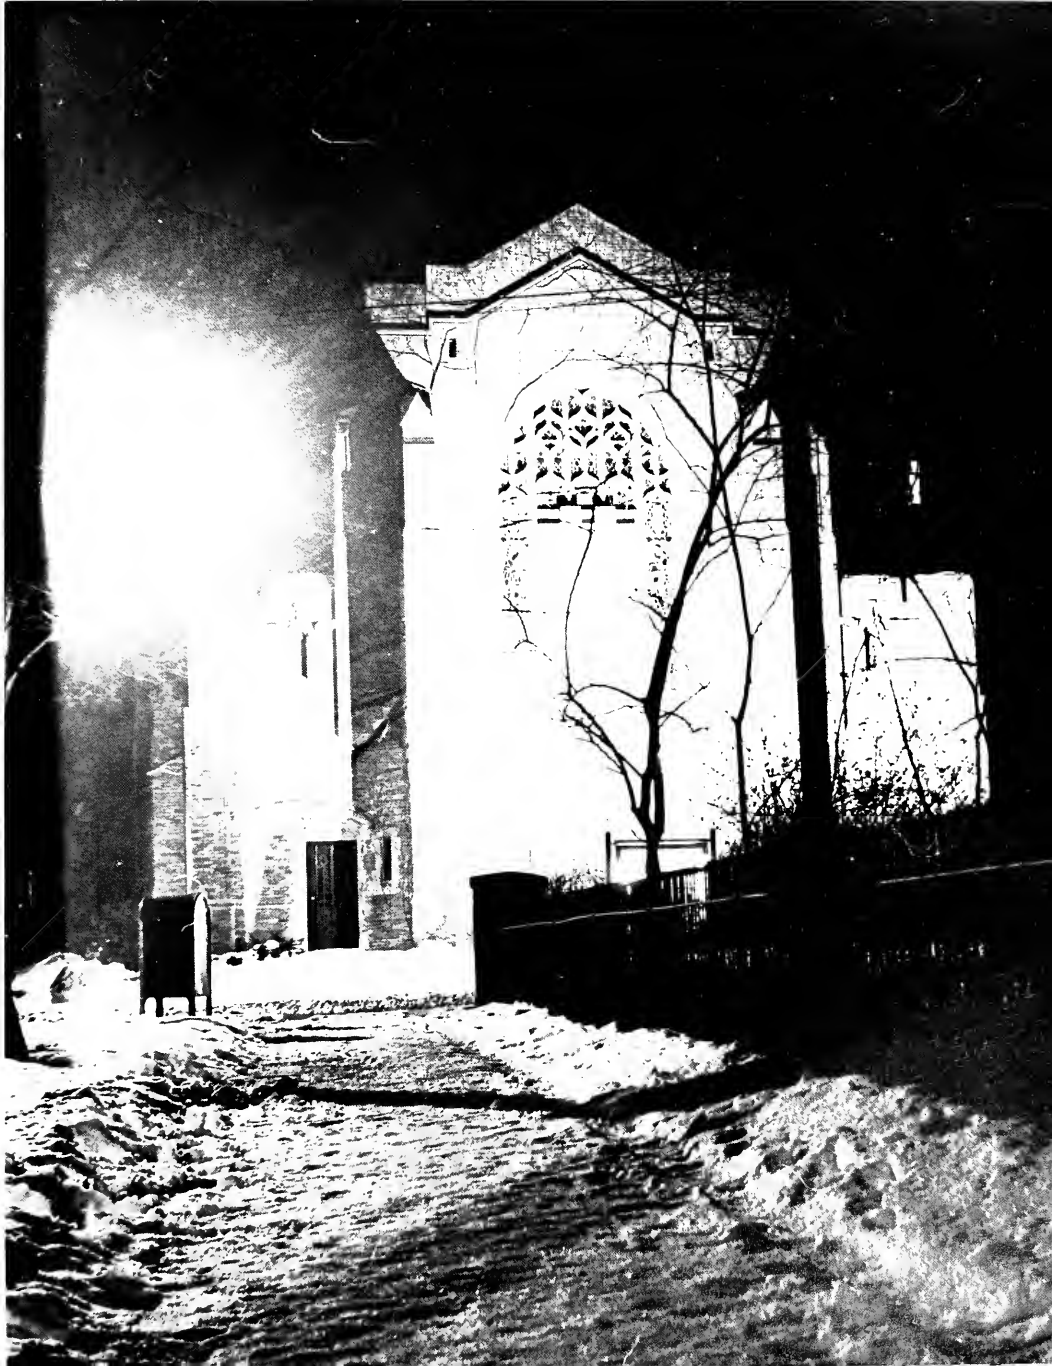

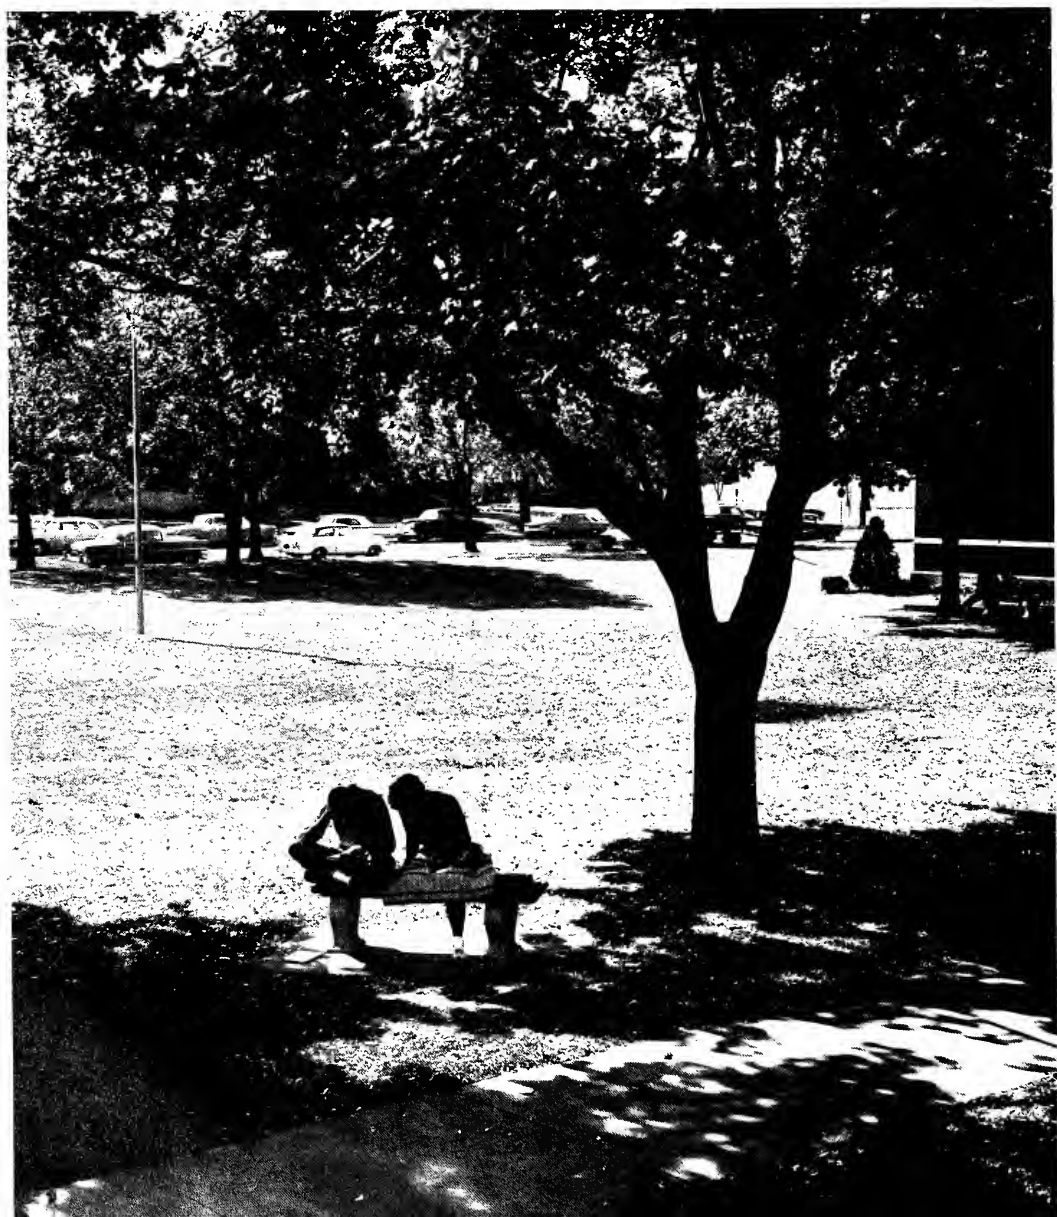

not politically important in itself, but part of a strategic state, grand rapids claimed the stout attentions of the candidates who lectured, slyly and sincerely. even class attendance dropped in deference to their removed appearance, and downtown seemed not far at all away.

chastened in its outlook by composite faiths, the city shapes her altering diligence and courage. our demeanor too, is altered, privately, or commonly. we meet, sometimes reluctantly, in recitation, and in prayer. and we are also met, in silence, confronted with the cross at each delinquent step, and kept with hope.

calvin college, is, from the outside an appearance, a scattering of buildings, and a lawn, undetermined architecture, typical landscaping. but for us, who shape it, it remains the strange and unalterable measure of our hopes, defeats, diligences, pleasure, and we who love it well know its faults best, its place, its placing of ourselves.

the dining hall, a place for cuisine and conversation, is rarely empty. students file in and out daily, occasionally gaining something from its light confusion, occasionally adding a bit of personality to its accumulation. it is not the tables and chairs, nor even the well-balanced meals that bring the room to life; it is the student—in infinite variety—who gives the room personality and makes the dining good.

the era of the downtrodden bicycle, if calvin's campus serves as evidence, has come to its conclusion. school pedestrians remain unbothered by the law; bike-riders, harassed only by the city-building, rest complacent; while the coy policeman generously leaves the pink reminders for delinquent drivers.

registration, the mechanics of academics, begins the year, and amidst the confusion of just being settled, comes the unsettling realization that chapel is required, that classes simply are not scheduled just for you. waiting in the bookstore line provides a long acquaintance with the basement ceiling, with the chewy contents of the canteen, and the publications office door.

the gymnastics of registration are properly situated in the gym. classes, coffee-breaks, and the long endurance prior to a degree all are calculated here, where the class-card reigns.

it is never an easy thing to express gratitude—words are so futile when measured by the deeds they seek to honor. particularly this is true when we attempt to show our appreciation for a career which has extended for more years than some of us have lived, and than any of us have been permitted to share here at calvin. ours is an opportunity to recognize the service which, for the past twenty-two years, has been given to calvin college by Dr. Richard Drost; we undertake to do so with humility, but encouraged by the knowledge that he will be as sympathetic with our present failings as he has been with them in the past.

as professor of history, as a sponsor of campus organizations, as director of chapel activities, and perhaps more than any of these, as a friend and personal advisor whose sincerity and warmth were immediately and constantly apparent, Dr. Drost has well merited the affection with which this year's prism is dedicated to him.

for over a quarter of a century Albert H. Muyskens has given unstintingly, unselfishly of his time, his knowledge, his abilities, in a word, of himself, for calvin college, and for us as her students. we should like to make one installment towards repaying our debt of gratitude—a debt which is all the greater because payment has never been, and would never be, demanded—by dedicating this book to him.

a dedication is at best a feeble means of expressing gratitude; the stiffness of language and the formalism of rhetoric cannot begin to manifest the love, the admiration, the respect which Mr. Muyskens has engendered in our hearts, and in the hearts of twenty-five generations of calvin students who have gone before. knowing that whatever we do is not enough, we can only say to this kindly, humble, intensely human scholar: thank you, Mr. Muyskens.

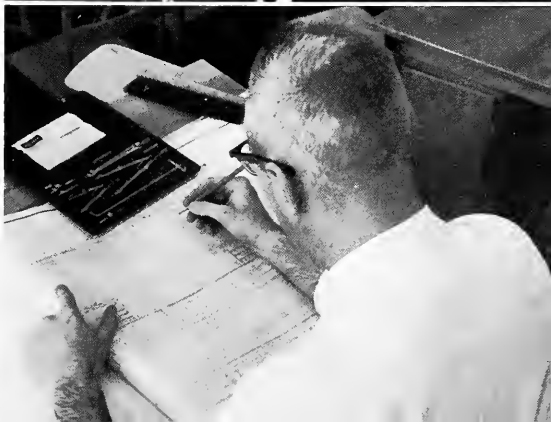

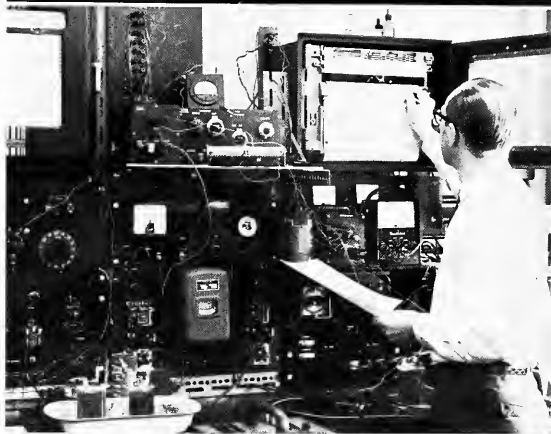

calvin does not, of itself, reconfigure us. our choice in coming here is often the hope that we may shape the college, or adjust it to our own peculiar needs, impede its purpose, or extend its reach on our behalf. and so our reasons sometimes run askew: we change and are changed here, sometimes rightly, sometimes humorously, often ignorantly.

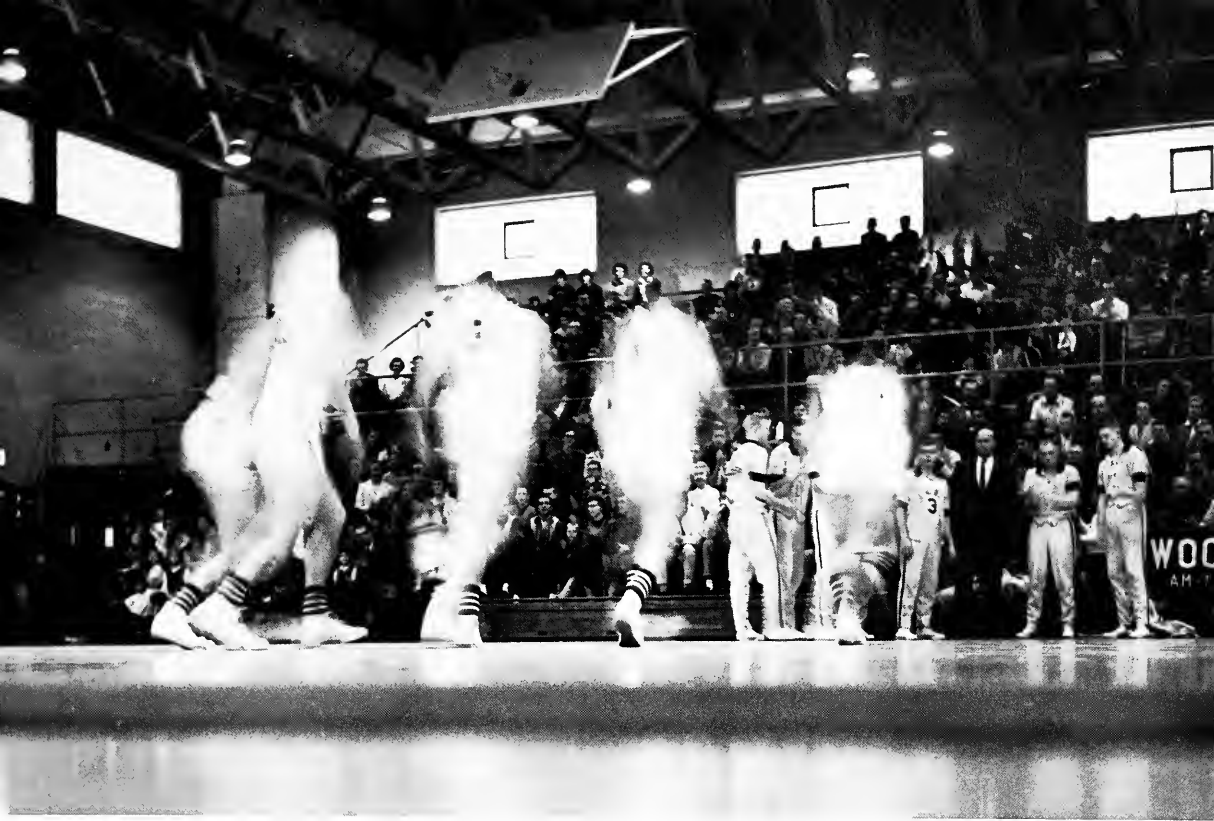

our presupposition is, of course, that study is the center of a college life, and fortunately, for most of us, this premise dictates our direction, and the hours that we keep. too often the future is unutterably remote, yet with conclusion of the disciplines, denials, and departures from the rule, there is suddenly a vision of the reason, and the goal.

for some calvin seems small and kind enough a place to be attractive just because it does not overwhelm us; we come because here, perhaps, recognition is won more easily, because in a smaller group prominence is more easily attained. but the demands are unrelenting, and success in any area must be earned. often we find that the less than valid search for fame results in genuine accomplishment.

some students come to calvin with expansive plans for having fun, for making primary that which is, supposedly, a lesser element. counterpointing rules by stretching freedoms, they embark, intrepid, on a road of unrestrained frivolity. for the most part, though, there remains the sense of limitation, and the sensibility to understand the reasons why.

coop parties, planned or unannounced, and annual interhousing capers have become among the most important of the "formidable influences." the coffee shop remains the campus social field, where briefly, but concisely, plans are made, and we decide about tomorrow night, next year, and sometimes, always.

only the bold will admit it, but even the timid are assured that many students come to calvin only for a spouse. female tactics are complemented by twirp week activities. there is little need for male encouragement and frequent drop-outs in the coed enrollment show that all the strategies have met with some success.

calvin has also become, in a peculiar sense, the symbol of escape, where, faced with a different kind of discipline, we substitute new rebellions for old. finding it difficult to worship under pressure and to conform to what seem to be irrelevant restrictions, we protest in slight but satisfying ways. but then, in time, we acknowledge our private resentments to be a battle with ourselves, and we reach a kind of independence and a more mature resolve.

for some there is the desire to achieve a quiet but intense purpose, for others dedication becomes a purpose, and hopefully for all, the academic involvements, although they loom somewhat menacingly, drape eager minds with thoughts and ambitions. artistic endeavors for some, club activities with concentrated attention for others, and individual study for all; a festival of arts, the quietness of the muse, and academic intricacies prove themselves for those who learn.

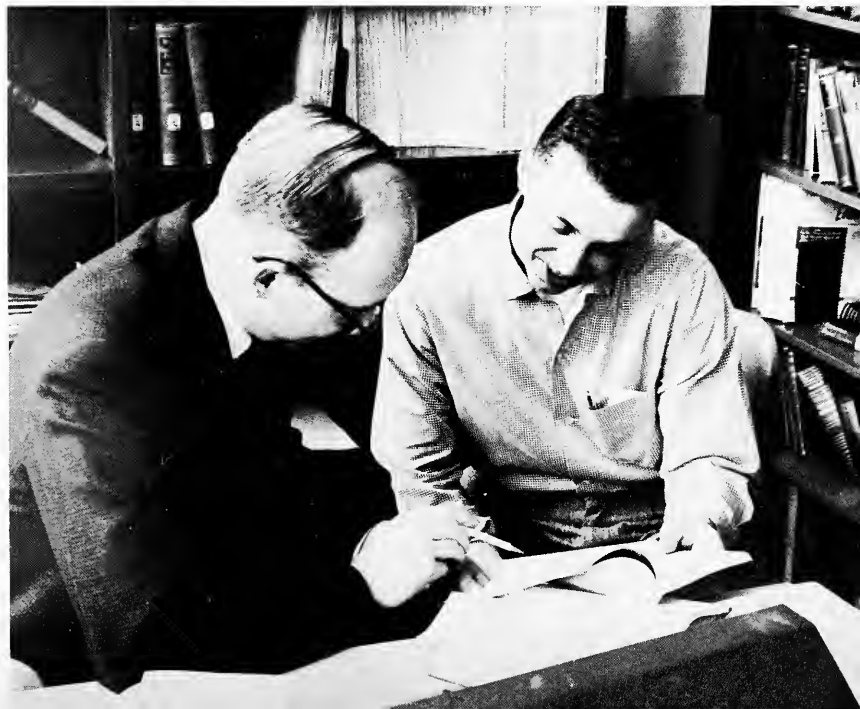

a beginning is made amidst the jumble of class cards, new classes, and the inevitable intrigue of new books. some promise to be interesting, others, just fundamental. and soon, the newness becomes a sameness and the bound supplements are tossed in sheltering cubicles—only for a moment—or an hour, and then again retrieved to bring new insights, new questions, and hopefully, new worlds.

for those who teach there is also a routine. a routine beginning in the rooms where thoughts and ideas are born and communicated; and then again transferred to the privacy of departmental discussions, only once again to stop and answer a question framed by an eager searching mind. they too—the lecturers, communicate . . . to the masses and for the individual.

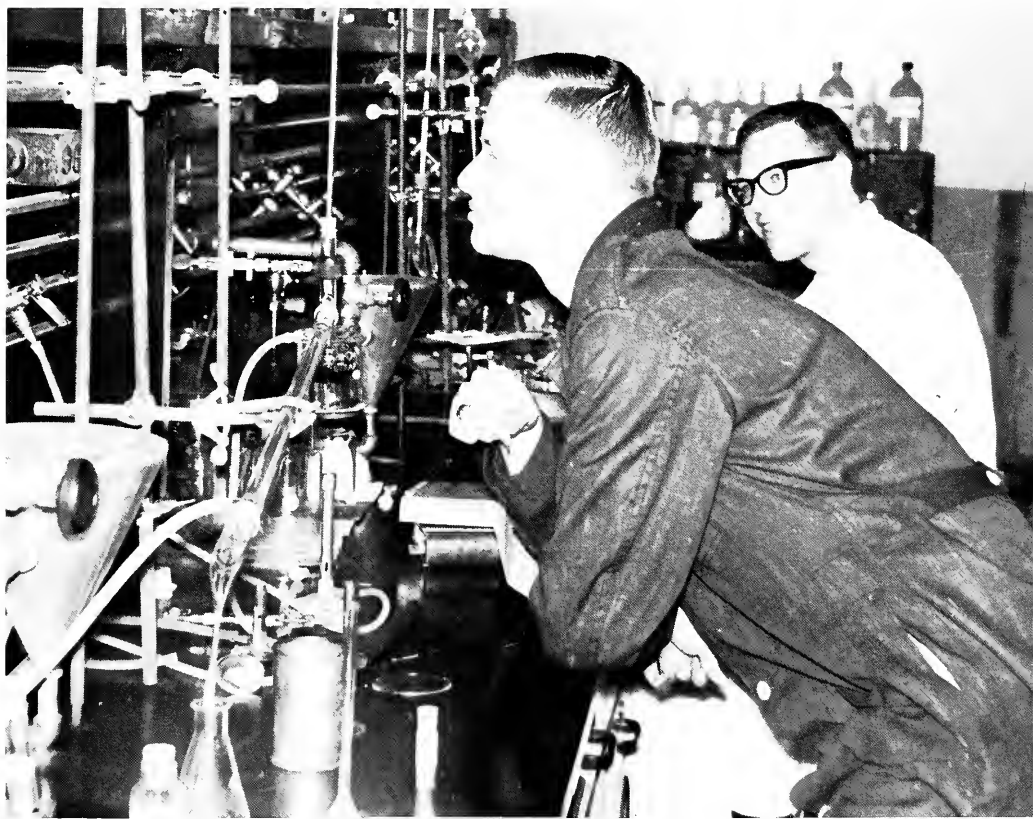

between the fifty minute sessions of science and arts, the long halls and cigarette porches provide a welcome change—if only for mobilization and personal communication. then, for some, back to the labyrinthine rooms with test tubes, scientific method and formaldehyde . . . to create, to discover, to experiment and to learn.

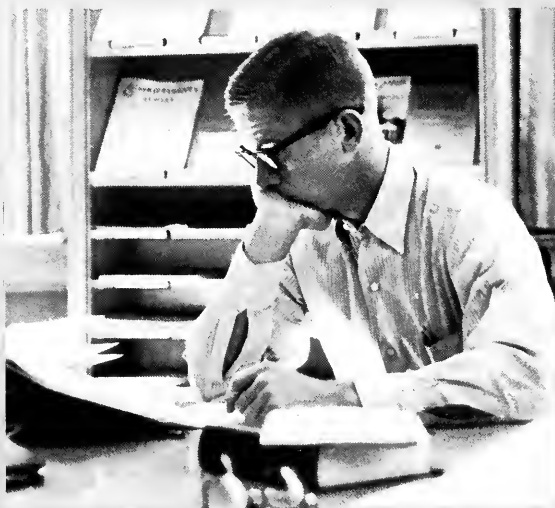

there is a certain amount of security found in pages bound so neatly and concisely. the little room with little books and medium sized books and large books offers a small measure of this security for those who wish to browse. the browser seeks and perhaps selects, and then departs—the proud possessor of an addition to a small, a medium or a large library.

to possess words bound on numbered pages is yet not enough. to read, to absorb, and to learn is still yet another step towards education. in a music filled room, a reference room or a reading room, the muses may take hold and the words on the pages become thoughts in a mind. sometimes in the semi-confusion and almost-quiet of a dorm room this happens. concentration and consecration somehow seem to battle together, setting up wires of mental communication.

pre-engineering students and others interested in the subject comprised the membership of engineering club. the all-male group, sponsored by professor bosscher, tried to become acquainted with numerous aspects of engineering through guest lectures and group discussion, supplemented by field trips, to, of all places, factories.

with characteristic zeal, the sociology club pursued the elusive solutions to the problems man faces in society. the pursuit as usual took the form of film-showings and speeches on such varied subjects as harlem mission work, racial prejudice, and urban renewal.

though equally zealous, the psychology club chose to face instead problems society finds in man. they affirmed mental health as the answer to the problems of the age.

political science club

international relations club

the international relations club managed briefly to wrench their gaze from the lofty problems of international relations to the less predictable realm of public relations; the problem of what to do with an unpopular homecoming display which won first prize.

the political science club managed to complement their annual pilgrimage to washington with occasional trips to view the michigan legislature in action.

clinging testily to their classical tradition, the debate club and the dialexis society argued, pleaded, syllogized, and, if all else failed, shouted their way through two semesters of speech events and debate tourneys. each achieved in some measure a perfection of the two basic qualities necessary for public speakers: a honeyed sincerity—regardless of which side he was on—and a well-polished invective.

meanwhile, the drama club provided thespians and their friends with an opportunity to relax with plays which, for technical reasons, could not be staged.

calvin's literary clubs continued the battle of the ages, dividing their memberships along the obvious battle lines. as usual, the women faithfully wrote the papers, read the books, and devoted at least half the evening to a discussion of the books. as usual, the men . . .

. . . were beset with stream-of-consciousness reviews, bad puns, and a touch of madness. both managed to effect at least a partial purgation of pity and fear, and emerged from the digs of their sponsors wiser, and, in some cases, happier as well.

calvin's mission club continued its early morning prayer meetings, with various members leading the devotions. its big project was mission emphasis week, which featured a series of chapel talks by rev. r. veenstra, missionary to nigeria.

the meistersingers provided their usual collegiate-sounding music for school functions. their year was highlighted by a trip to the chicago area for two concerts. they also provided the biggest shock of the year when they chose to render "the halls of ivy" during the half-time program at the homecoming game.

every sunday morning, the radio choir, under the direction of professor james de jonge, became a part of the radio-voice-of-the-christian-reformed-church; and were heard by hundreds of thousands of listeners across the nation. though not heard by so many, professor seymour swet's a cappella choir provided equally fine music in concerts and hymn-sings. as part of calvin's public relations program, and to acquaint the denomination with calvin's musical organizations, these groups spent the spring recess touring the mid-west.

the calvin oratorio society again combined with the calvin orchestra in their perennial, and perennially inspiring, presentation of handel's messiah. the spring concert was haydn's creation, which according to the chimes ". . . is based on the creation story as found in the Bible, and in john milton's paradise lost.

the calvin college chamber band and concert band, both under the direction of professor harold geerdes, continued to add to their varied repertoire, playing everything from souza marches to classical concert pieces. during spring vacation, the concert band made an extensive tour of the east coast and canada; and thus contributed their part to the unity that is calvin college.

there are those who act. they, the proud possessors of multiple phases of personality, are enabled to exhibit their talents and also, in a sense, to unfold the intricacies of humanity—under the lights and on the stage. for some, the stage, in a remote way, symbolizes just realized dreams. for those who participate behind the scenes and in the audience, there is perception and absorption. reality is momentarily released and the worlds of past, present, and future speed before amazed eyes. identification and transference work along with the portrayals of men and women who have once been a part of life through the powers of the stage, and who have now, once again, returned.

there is an element of backstage intrigue which comes with the building of a skeletal stage situation. this along with, and after early un-costumed rehearsals, is an integral part of play production. soon the actors are no longer stick men who have just been rehearsing. they become alive and costumed. sometimes we have a modern melodrama complete with villain. when the reality and poignancy of the stage play has been portrayed, the curtain comes down and the play becomes a memory—for those who have actively participated, but also for the audience.

there are galleys to be read, stories to be checked, features and sports to be arranged. this the result of every day busyness, tempered with a new angle for an old story along with editorials about war and poets and things emerging from brain waves in a dark-rimmed head, collaborating with thoughts and ideas of the troops as they assemble, discuss, and work to relay news, attitudes, and ideas.

the rag has an almost final stage of printer's check and then the news is new and ready to be read, scrutinized and more than likely criticized. but again, publication in another form is seen when the literati present their contributions to modernity. a review between two covers contains a representation of writing; some poems, some essays, some stories, all are attempts at communication. another bespectacled editor reads, chooses and encourages. then the literary review reaches the stands; some sold to interested readers, some sold to curious readers, some sold to critical readers, and some, not sold at all—to non-readers.

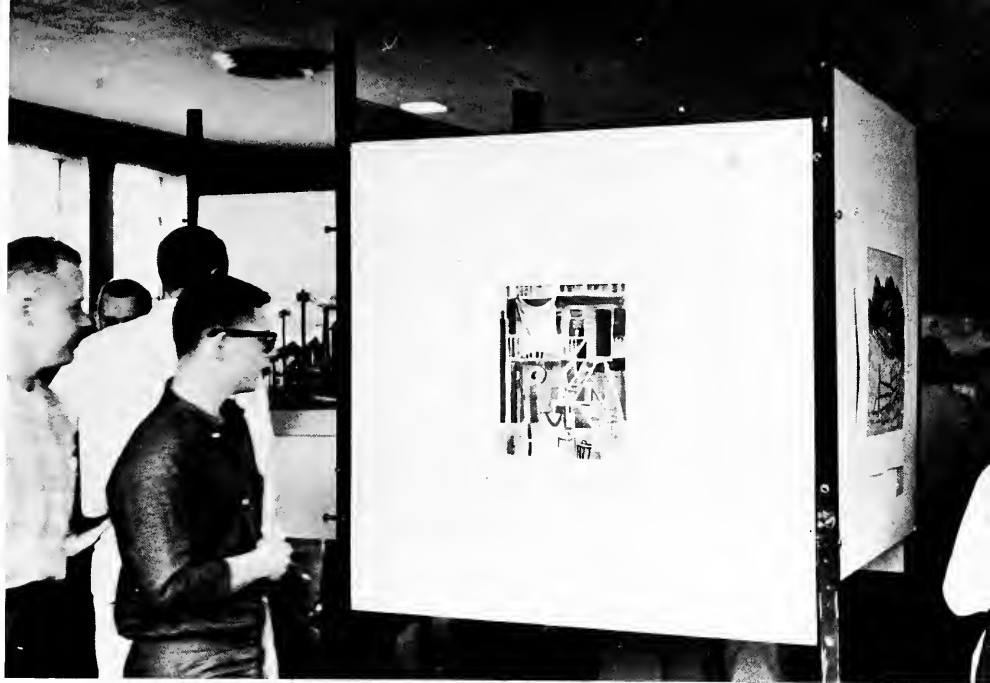

the school; and the students, who are, in a real sense, the school, must be portrayed. this is done photographically in pages of classes and clubs and students and faculty. the organizer, un-spectacled but ambitious guides the many working hands as they formulate and organize a prism of college life. the man with the little black box drifts from students to organizations to buildings—just looking—for ideas, for people, for pictures, to represent the unity of a college.

there are those who paint, others write; there are those who take pictures, others compose. a festival of their efforts culminates in the prize found at the top of the stairs. for some this is only a beginning, for all, it is progress. the canvas reviews can be found on walls in a red couched room; and the poems and music can be read and enjoyed.

the advancements of the literati are not kept a secret. and the beginnings of a landscape or an abstract found in the small class-art room, often find rest on larger walls and bigger rooms. but there is always music. . . . the quietness of a smokey room and a blue mood is also a part of the feeling and understanding of sensitive souls who have been visited by the muses.

although the academic is integral to scholarly importance, the social, for the gregarious nature of the student, is also a necessary implement for life on a campus. there are banquets with food and speeches and music and new dresses, and there are lectures, and there is individual and team athletic participation. all this contributes to the feeling of unity which the individuals in a liberal arts college attempt to cultivate and to communicate.

the mixer, traditionally the occasion for the first commingling of the faculty and students, began the year casually, with a last bit of warmth before winter, and the relenting routine of classes, bluebooks, and exams. the bonfire was (as we wish so much of what we do here would be) a concrete symbol of the calvin spark. its light illumined knollcrest, and for those of us who will never live or meet our classes there, it left, at least, a memory.

for most of us, participation in basketball is limited to the intramural tournaments and the bleachers in one of the local gymnasiums. basketball games provide a ready and pleasant diversion from the tedium of study and the guilt feelings occasioned by the neglect of study. yet with the exception of traditional high points—the hope game and the homecoming game—we frequently fail to participate even as spectators. but this year witnessed no decline in spectator interest, and as each game played became another game won, each new game became a very special occasion.

homecoming was industriously awaited, boisterously supported, though there was unrestrained nighthawbery in their preparation, and disgruntlement at their completion, the displays, as usual, provided a dubious attraction to the campus, displaying the wit and ingenuity of otherwise downtrodden students.

homecoming advanced its endeavors to be a real occasion for the alumni. the coffee kletz and the lively alumni production promoted a spirit of re-acquaintance, which was climaxed by the game.

in an attempt to forget the classroom for a while, friends seek out friends in the lounges and halls. the clever and the fortunate find a place to sit. a chess game, a light conversation, and a between-snacks snack provide encouragement and strength to tired bodies and reluctant minds.

between classes students move to the commons to rest from their labors, or to diversify their relaxation. the waiting-line, the seven-cent cup of stimulant, the individual contributions to the constant buzz of words—these constitute the coffee-break, which at calvin too has become a tradition.

the spring banquets highlighted the concluding week of school, retaining their places as the prime gala events of the college social season. for those in first attendance, there was blushing, some dismay, for those leaving, a last meeting, and the end of a four-year tradition.

student council met with regularity and handled its business with dispatch. though riddled by financial ills, it managed to advance the causes of the arts at calvin, to take a scrutinizing look at homecoming, and to promote the general welfare. it struggled to secure the rights of life, and limited liberty, and tried to prompt pursuits a great deal more diverse and difficult than happiness.

laughter diluted with a seriousness—only momentary, as young hearts communicate and concentrate—every once a day minute of frivolity tempered with anxious learning.

news of the day caught in quick snatches between old maid and poker faces of dormites relaxing and undormites keeping house.

informal retreat from academic busy-ness, well equipped with aspiring male housekeepers who find time to relax, preparing meals, enjoying un-prepared late evening snacks, or listening to the latest records with the latest feminine accompaniment.

a green tree with lights of red and white—decorated by willing hands and eager hearts. a feeling of season's gladness travels too, on a long road home for a short winter vacation.

"reflections" of days past and a memory for now, illuminating subdued thoughts in season's warmth, guided by waking minds and praying hearts.

the unity of prayer in the quietness of early morning, and later the communion of searching hearts to sing, to listen, and to pray—for certainty to heal divided thoughts.

for most of us sport at calvin is many things, cheerleaders, the hope game, intramurals, and a friday sports page. for the athlete it is more, and sometimes less than this. when the gun or whistle sounds, then crowds, bluebooks, dates, and money troubles recede from his consciousness, and the contest becomes a personal combat using the rules and weapons of the game in a test of his strength, skill, and intelligence. sport at calvin is entertainment, exercise, and a pursuit of excellence.

soccer at calvin was marked by even finer quality of play, and a rise of student interest. playing against some of the toughest competition in the nation, the knights held their own, and finished the season with a 5-3-2 record. calvin received honor and recognition at the close of the season when 3 of the squad members were chosen for positions on the all midwest soccer conference teams.

calvin's cross-country team lacked the fanatical zeal of their previous two years, but they replaced it with a more mature confidence which carried them to a third straight miaa championship, a perfect 12-0 season record, and a seventh place finish in the national ncaa meet. the four-mile men were their own harshest masters in shaping themselves into champions of strength, will power, and endurance.

two dramatic victories over hope automatically insured a successful basketball season, but the knights achieved much more than that. they defeated all twenty opponents, and in doing so they won the miaa championship, set a new season record, earned a tenth place national rating, and stretched the winning streak to twenty-six games.

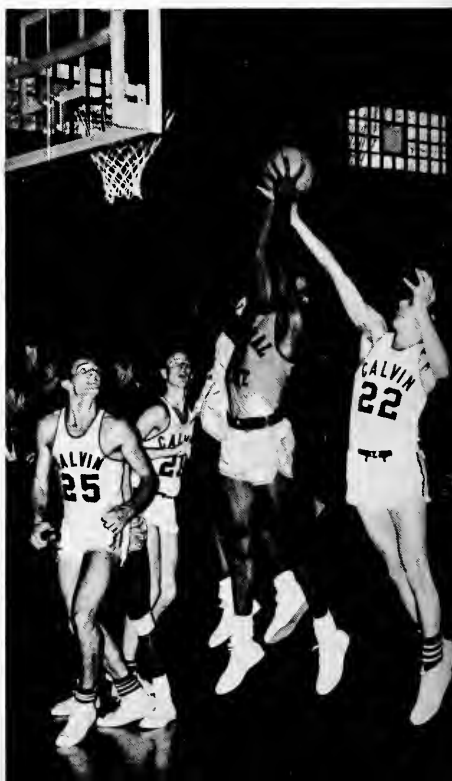

much of the excitement, color, and tension of the hope game came from the old rivalries, the traditions, and the memories of the two schools. but after the fans stacked themselves into the civic it was the players themselves who produced something special—the usual number of extra-ordinary, spectacular, and brilliant performances.

co-captain bill wolterstorff's high scoring combined with his outstanding rebounding and defensive play was a big factor in calvin's rise as a basketball power. ralph honderd, the other senior co-captain, whose savage rebounding and powerful driving has delighted fans for four years, also played a major role in the team's success. guards carl de kuiper and len rhoda had the roaring crowd on its feet frequently all season with their slashing drives, accurate set shots, and cat-quick defensive play. warren otte shot and passed accurately, and his ball hawking was a thorn in the side of many opponents. henry de mots and dan bos were rotated in the lineup regularly without ever noticeably weakening the team on the floor. honderd, wolterstorff, and de kuiper were picked for the honorary miaa allstar team, and otte, rhoda and de mots were given honorable mention.

in a rare straightforward statement voluble coach barney steen called his squad "the best calvin team ever." few opponents seriously challenged the knights. a fanatic aquinas team gave chase for one half; the game adrian squad was within reach until the last minute; the sharp-shooting taylor trojans gave the homecoming crowd a scare when they led by seven points at the half; and the kalamazoo hornets made a valiant effort in the last game of the season; but all were eventually beaten. in their finest hour the knights combined perfect passing with precision shooting in a nearly flawless performance which devastated central state. the fans came to expect twenty-point victories, and frequently even the most valiant efforts by the cheerleaders aroused only polite applause.

with little publicity and few fans, the junior varsity squad played, as usual, in the shadow of the varsity. the freshmen were aided frequently by high scoring varsity reserves, jim timmer, bill lenters, pete winkle, and dave vander hart; together they rolled up a creditable 10-5 season record.

because of early printer's deadlines all one could see of this year's spring sports teams might be pitchers throwing in the cage, tennis players and golfers swinging in the gym, or trackmen sprinting in the soggy sooty snow. on many spring days the quiet of franklin park is broken by a shouted "service!" and the ripe pong of hard-hit tennis balls. below the hill can be heard a raucous "get a hit, rocky!" and occasionally the sharp crack of a line drive. both teams have high hopes of rising from the positions in the middle of the league where they finished last year.

this spring the cindermen are fighting to keep the miaa crown they won last year. with a toughened corps of distance runners, several other fine veterans, and some promising rookies, their chances are good. with the knollcrest track and field to practice on for the first year, several thinclads are serious threats to calvin and miaa records.

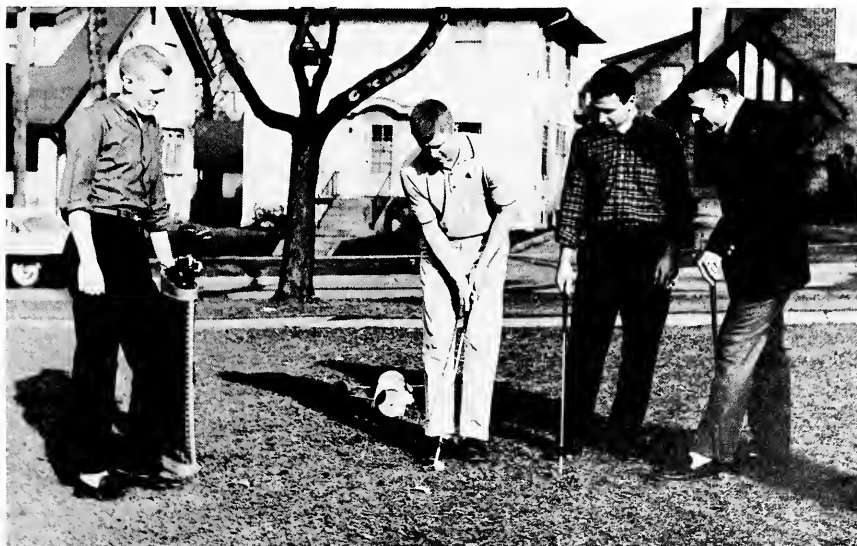

last year the golfers competed leisurely with little apparent success. coffee-shop sportsmen bemoaned their play and threatened to try for the team. with a winning season on the golf course, calvin could possibly win an allsports trophy.

this fall many enthusiastic sportsmen on campus again competed in touch football, and joined jfk in sport on the new frontier. the many close games and the fierce headbutting competition generated even more interest and arguments than usual. after a long and bruising campaign the sophomore flying dutchmen defeated the senior knobknockers in the final battle for the intramural crown.

in the annual women's intramural archery tournament jan van wyke defeated all opponents, and successfully defended her title as the sharpest shooter on campus. women also invaded the soccer fields this year, and teams from each of the classes competed in an intramural tournament which was unfortunately abbreviated by the arrival of winter.

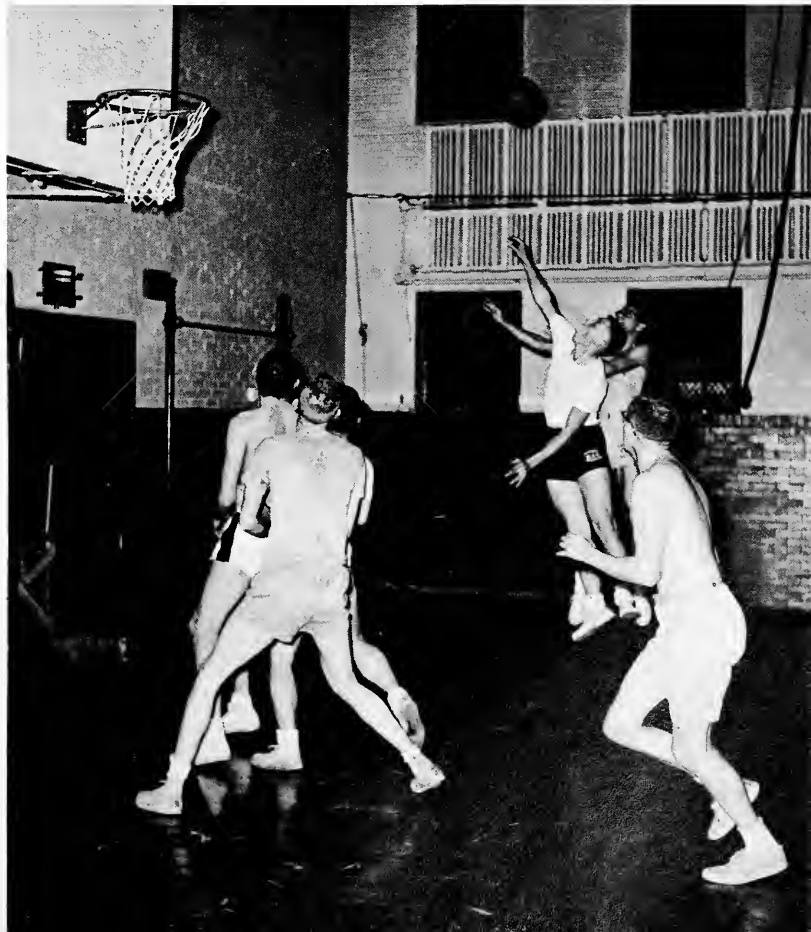

basketball, the perennial intramural favorite, drew thirty teams this winter. teams ranging in ability from green novices to poised pros competed in five leagues. the faculty allstars gleefully demonstrated the fine points of play as they whipped all comers to capture the intramural volleyball championship for the second straight year. meanwhile, the intramural bowlers competed in plush comfort at holiday lanes. senior bill ryskamp did not make the prism scene, but his high average led both leagues.

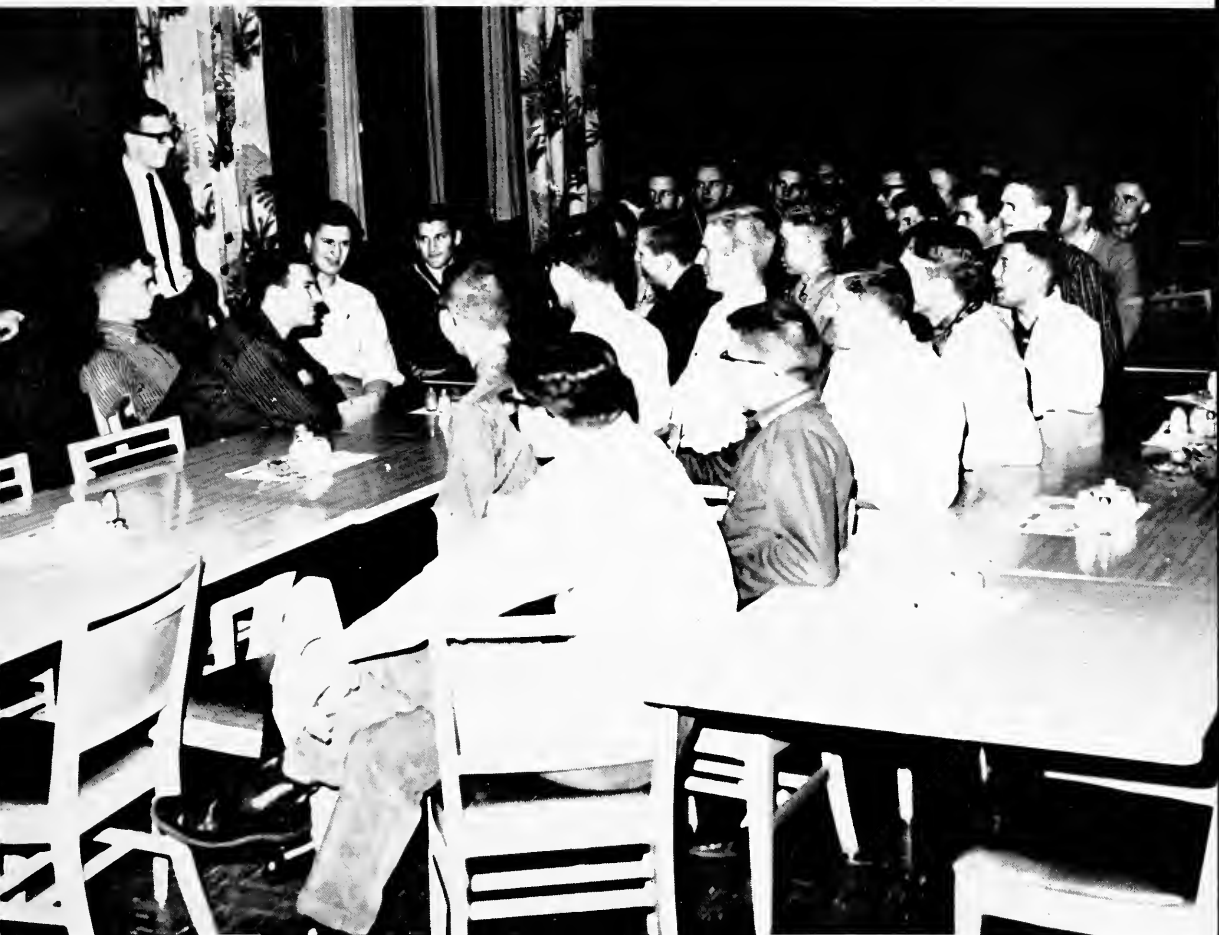

again this year the calvin college swimming team failed to conquer a single opponent. the failure was understandable: the swimming team had drowned.

although never recognized as varsity sport, the swimming team—before this year—had managed to flounder, sputter, and stay afloat. unaided by box office receipts, cheers, or glory days, the swimming team had tried valiantly to earn the right to represent calvin. inspired by noble athletic ideals and by the pleasure which they took in competitive swimming, the team had persisted in its quest unhindered by any serious attention from the athletic department.

but this year was different. for the first time in several years, the athletic department did give the swimming team some serious attention. and now there are those who mourn. the athletic department cancelled the schedule.

the varsity club sponsored twirp week, varsity varities, and basketball programs with moderate success in an annual campaign to raise funds for expansion of athletic facilities at knollcrest. unofficially its serious members tried to disprove a caricature and to show that sport is second—but an important second.

seminary

this year has been a major milestone in the history of our seminary as well as our college. knollcrest is now more than a dream, or a park, or an athletic field; and the concrete evidence that it is more than a dream is the seminary campus. but these new buildings are the fulfillment of another dream, one which has been in the process of realization since synod determined to create a fitting centennial memorial some five years ago. the memorial is now there—a tribute to the efforts of men and the grace of God, a promise of continued effort and a prayer for continued grace.

a towering cross to lift our thoughts upward to God and point them backward to our Lord Christ Jesus daily reminds us why we are here. beneath it is our house of prayer. here in quiet meditation. enthusiastic singing, and careful listening to God's word, the challenge of life's work is brought into sharper focus. truly this is the heart of the seminary.

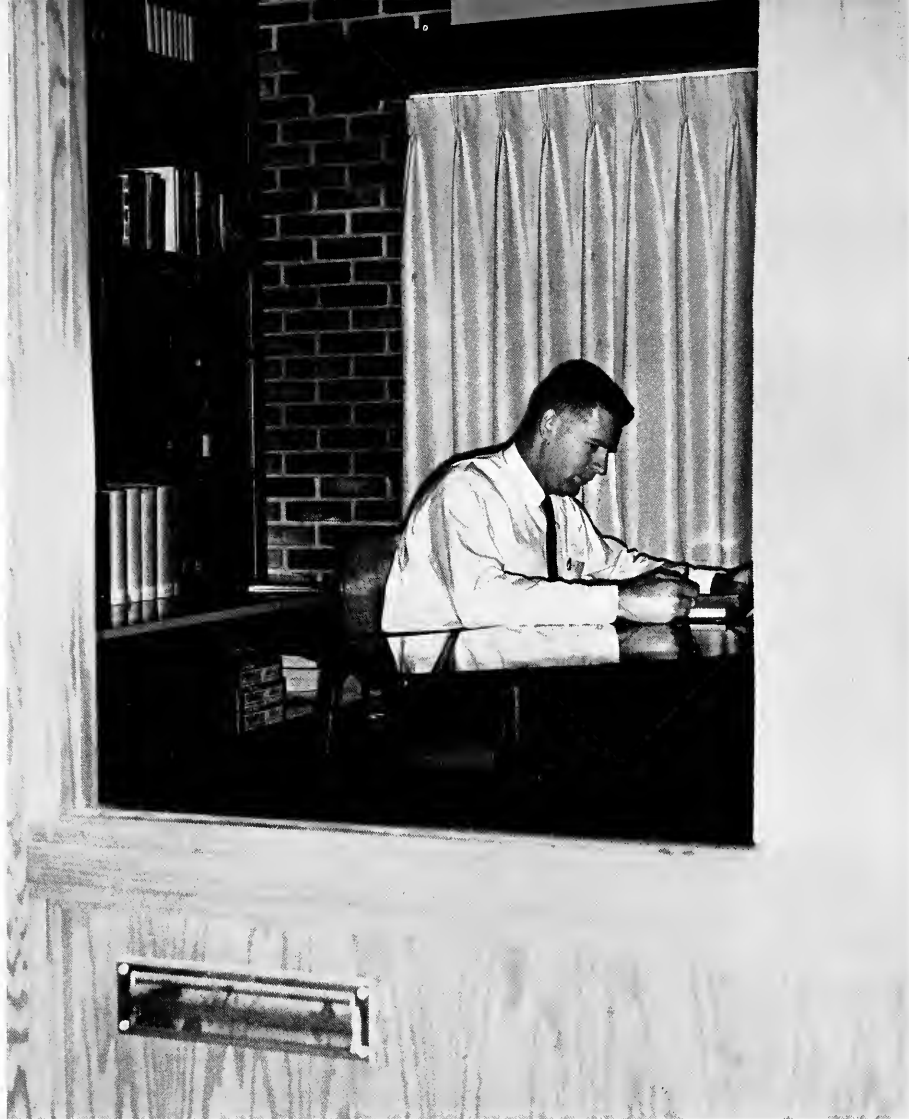

a noisy corridor is the lifeline of the seminary. ringing footsteps and echoing conversations accompany the student bringing the business of learning into the shadow of the cross.
along this noisy hallway a renewed commitment is carried back into classroom, coffee shop and office, back into the auditorium during special lectures about communism in japan.
13th century french cathedrals, or filing systems.

here in solitary confinement the doctors carry on their new research into the meaning of old participles, careful weighing of confusing historical trends, and judicious disentangling of elusive dogmatic distinctions so that the truth may more brightly shine in classroom lectures. from time to time they call a solemn assembly to see to it that the seminary and all other things are running smoothly.

new classrooms and comfortable libraries make schoolwork more pleasant but not much easier, even builders with bulldozers could not widen into a royal road the rocky path to learning, and so along with busy hands and eyes and minds goes the hope that somehow in, under and with the periscopes, proof texts, and piels and dates, definitions, and details, may be found a better understanding and surer vision of the truth.

who can resist the temptation of a new book? not our students, be they young or old. who knows, perhaps some new ingenious author has found the answers to all the old problems. and if such a one is not yet to be found, there is no need to worry. the students' penetrating insights during informal discussions are bound to turn up something.

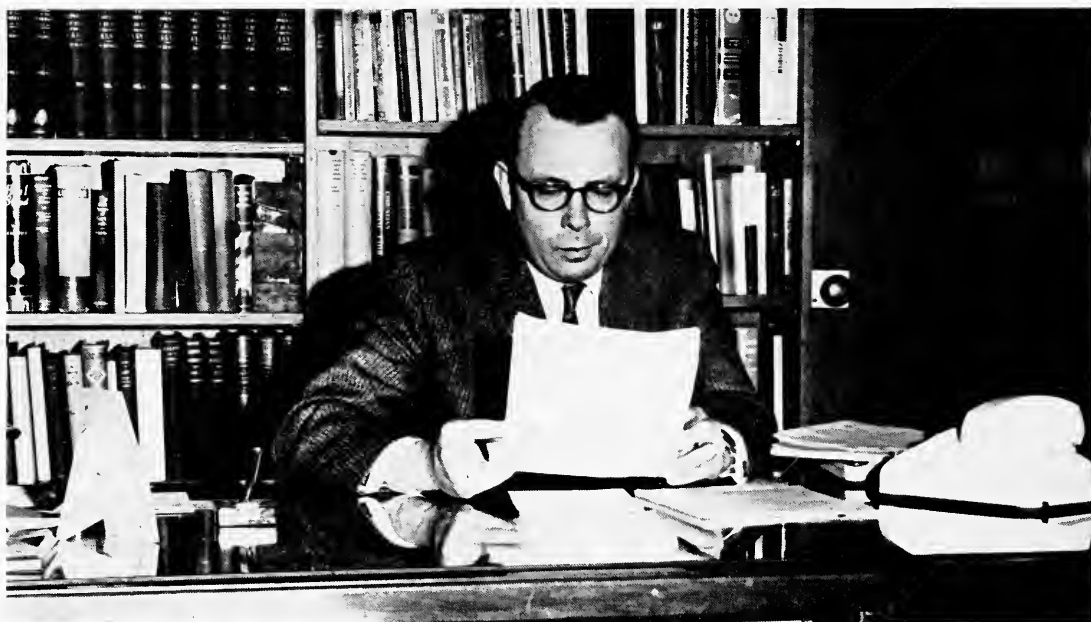

here learning ends and knowledge begins. proper use of coffee and doughnut, and pawns and queens guarantees that all questions shall be answered here and all problems solved. who is taking the call to timbuktú? whose baby is next that's due? what's this modern world coming to? pull up a chair, and we'll tell you.
